Hope in Our Final Season Teresa Wolf

Hope in Our Final Season will help identify the crisis in America in end-of-life care giving and offer one effective community solution to this gap in care through the Social Model Hospice home. It will also describe our human needs for that peaceful homelike setting as we face our final days. And it will offer a source of hope as we begin to prepare ourselves, and our loved ones for that last sacred journey. Every person in America will face the challenges of finding the best pathway for care when they are in their last days of life. Over 87% of us say we want to die at home; but 70% of us are dying in the hospital or nursing home setting. For an alarming number of people, dying at home is not possible, because they are alone and lack a family caregiver or the means to pay for their own round-the-clock caregiving needs. The resources for affordable facilities for end-of-life care in our communities are scarce or nonexistent. The millions of seniors across the country who need an alternative home for care and caregiving, at the end of their life, is now a national social crisis.
