The Love of God in Biblical Counseling is far from being just another book about the love of God or biblical counseling. It shatters preconceived ideas and reaches to the very core of who we are in Christ. It addresses much more than techniques and methodologies as it shows the vital role that our participation in the very nature and love of God makes in our life and in the lives of others.

The book is an essential reading for practicing and aspiring counselors, as it invites them to deepen their practice. For ministers, as it presents the depth and importance of our calling to serve others in Christ. For the Christian who is considering the possibility of seeking help for some of the challenges of life, as it provides the discernment needed to evaluate that help.

The Love of God in Biblical Counseling comes highly recommended. As Dr. Gary Deddo (president of Grace Communion Seminary) wrote, it not only provides a valuable contribution to the practice of the Christian ministry of the Word, but it points the way for the improvement of the models currently circulating. The book offers a brief historical background to help the reader understand important changes that have taken place in the care of the soul. It then introduces the vital importance of a Trinitarian incarnational theology of the love of God for meaningful and practical Christian ministry and spiritual formation. It includes a brief review of specific cases as well as a number of testimonials from individuals and couples who have been blessed by this approach to ministry.
