Electoral processes have been riddled with controversy, more often than not. The United States presidential election, 2000 (remember the Florida recount?) is just one case in point. Keeping up with the seemingly global tradition, the Pakistan general election, 2013, was subject to rigging accusations and recount demands. It's more than evident now: we need a revised electoral system, one that is equitable and secure. "Cloud Based Online Management System (COEMS)" has been developed keeping the vacuums in the current electoral process under consideration. With thorough research to back them up, the authors not only shed light on the system they have developed, but also compare it with the ones employed by the United States and neighbor, India. With the requirement of a competently fair system becoming indisputably evident, COEMS may just be the magic bullet we're waiting for.
